Site abandoned due to persistent wet soils

The Dexter location received consistent light rains through April, May and June. 12 inches of snow fell here on May 2nd, and cool temps prevented any field work until May 13. Eric was able to get 200 acres of corn planted on that day, on a field with drainage tile spaced 40' apart. Still, his planting conditions were far from perfect. I was planting elsewhere in MN and was unable to get here before the rains returned. There was no opportunity to plant here until mid-June, despite moving the plot location to a field that had better drainage than the original site. Eric reports he was unable to plant 25 percent of his corn ground this year, causing a learning curve in how to manage prevent plant acres with cover crops. The corn Eric did harvest yielded an average of 191 bu/acre, with grain moisture around 24%. Eric told me that the hybrid he planted most of his acres to was about 5 or 6 points wetter than the same hybrid harvested by FIRST in the MN Southwest corn region this fall. He hopes that he never has to have prevent plant acres again, but the situation did allow him to add drainage tile on some of his wetter ground.
